The Department of Physics has developed the following written policy for use in evaluating candidates for promotion from the rank of assistant to associate teaching professor. The department reserves the right to change this policy from time to time in accordance with the needs of the department. The policy is not to be construed as creating any contractual right to promotion. No one should construe performance appraisals or reappointment as a guarantee of a positive promotion decision. The criteria and procedures set forth in The Reynolda Campus Faculty Handbook, and the policies and procedures of general application referred to in or authorized by the University’s Bylaws or in the policy resolutions in implementation of the Bylaws, shall govern in the event of any conflict with this department’s policies or procedures.

Prior to Promotion-Decision Year

1. The department chair will give each teaching track assistant professor a copy of this policy and then subsequently provide an annual written evaluation of his or her performance using current College practice for those evaluations. Copies of the annual evaluations will be placed in the faculty member's file in the departmental office.

2. Each assistant teaching professor is typically hired for a two-year appointment, which is renewable. In the second year of each two-year appointment, the Department Chair will make a recommendation for reappointment or non-reappointment to the Dean and Provost. If a recommendation for non-reappointment is made and accepted by the Administration, the faculty member will receive notification by a date determined by the Dean’s office that his or her contract will expire at the end of the Spring semester of the second year. Notification of subsequent reappointment or non-reappointment will be handled in the same manner as for the initial appointment.

3. Each teaching track assistant professor who is reappointed will ordinarily be reviewed for promotion during the 6 year of service at Wake Forest (or in such year as is stated in their original letter of appointment). This understanding will be committed to writing and will be kept in the faculty member's file in the departmental office and in the Offices of the Dean and the Provost.

4. At the beginning of the promotion review year, the department chair will discuss with each candidate the procedures that will be followed by the department in conducting the promotion review.
Compiling the Dossier

5. The department chair will be responsible for collecting and maintaining the candidate's dossier and for seeing that all steps are followed according to schedule. The dossier will consist of any and all materials that reasonably relate to the candidate's qualifications for promotion, as defined in the department's criteria (listed below) and in any guidelines for dossier preparation provided by the Dean’s Office. It will include both materials collected by the department chair and materials submitted by the candidate.

6. The department chair will ask the candidate to supply a complete and up-to-date curriculum vitae and teaching statement/teaching self-evaluation. The candidate and the department chair will discuss what additional materials the candidate will submit and the timetable for their submission. The composition of the dossier will be tailored to meet Dean’s Office guidelines.

7. Evaluation of the candidate's teaching is an important component in making promotion decisions. A candidate for promotion should provide student evaluations from each course they have taught in the previous 2 years. The candidate must also provide a summary of overall effectiveness or overall performance of the instructor for all courses that they have taught at Wake Forest University. In addition to student teaching evaluations and the evaluations summary, the department will request peer evaluations from at least 2 WFU faculty members. One will be a faculty member in Physics, and one will be from another science department at WFU. The department chair (or his/her agent) will recruit these peer evaluators from a designated pool of trained peer reviewers. These reviewers will be using an observation protocol which has been shared with the promotion candidate (attached at the end of this document). Each evaluator will attend at least one class taught by the candidate in the semester in which the candidate is applying for promotion. These may include lectures, discussions, or laboratory sections. These visits should be planned with the promotion candidate and should include a pre-meeting before the observation. The peer evaluators will also have access to the course syllabus, class materials, and course exams or assessments and they will include a review of these materials in their reports.

8. The candidate will be allowed, upon request, to inspect the contents of his or her dossier, with the exception of confidential evaluations.

Departmental Criteria

9. Departmental evaluation of faculty is guided by principles that apply throughout the College as outlined in the Reynolda Campus Faculty Handbook. These may change from time to time but currently they read “The College guidelines for promotion from assistant to associate teaching professor are based on demonstration of outstanding teaching, mentoring, and advising along with sustained excellent service at the department and college level.”

Teaching

It is assumed that new faculty members are committed to the instructional process, to providing the methods for the acquisition of knowledge, and to providing a reasoned interpretation of this knowledge. This is what the term 'professor' means - one who espouses a point-of-view. Faculty members are encouraged to develop a 'style-of-teaching' that conveys to students a love of learning. Teaching is not confined to the classroom and laboratory; much of it involves informal discussions and a willingness to be an authoritative resource. Teaching is not just expertise in lecturing, but includes giving instructional guidance through work on advisory committees and the writing of instructional materials. Much of good teaching is subtle and warrants recognition.
Mentoring

Evidence of one on one or small group mentoring of students will be noted and valued in addition to teaching and service.

Advising

Advising of first year students, majors, minors or undergraduate research students will be noted and valued in addition to teaching and service.

Service

Service to the department in the form of advising, planning, administering, and implementing various programs or decisions is an essential aspect of a faculty member's contribution and serves as a vital adjunct to one’s teaching record. Recruiting undergraduate and graduate students, developing and modifying curricula, supporting special programs such as seminars, symposia and tutorials, maintaining library resources, and conducting the day-to-day business of the department would be impossible without such input. Since such service is deemed important and necessary, the quality of a faculty member's contribution will be considered when his/her record is reviewed.

Service to the University involves many similar activities. Work on committees or in administration not only ensures an influence over practical and policy decisions, it provides opportunities for information gathering and the expression of concerns.

Service of a professional nature to private organizations or various governmental agencies usually represents public recognition of an individual's scientific expertise or other skills and is valuable for the opportunities and rewards it may provide to faculty and students and for the positive exposure it gives the department and university.

Other

In conjunction with all the above criteria, and apart from them, the department considers as very important the faculty member's collegiality, including professional integrity, successful interaction with colleagues, staff, and students, and compatibility with the stated purposes of the College and University.

Research that incorporates pedagogy in some way, such as the involvement of undergraduate and/or graduate students in studying or developing research ideas will also merit consideration in the review of the candidate for promotion.

The Departmental Decision

10. The completed dossier of the candidate will be made available to all associate and full tenured and teaching track professors in the department well before a decision is to be made. The department chair will make arrangements for obtaining the input of associate and full professors who are on sabbatical or who are serving as overseas directors.

12. The candidate's qualifications for promotion will be discussed in at least one meeting of the associate and full tenured and teaching track faculty before a decision is reached. The department chair will notify these faculty in advance when these meetings will take place.
13. The departmental vote on each candidate can be written or oral. If written, the department chair will report the overall numerical outcome to the associate and full tenured and teaching track faculty and will include this information in his or her recommendation to the Dean and the Provost. All aspects of the promotion deliberations must be treated as confidential and must not be revealed beyond the associate and full tenured and teaching track faculty of the department and appropriate members of the academic administration.

14. The department chair will make his or her recommendation to the Dean and the Provost by the date specified by the Dean’s office. In addition to his or her own recommendation (which will be shared with associate and full tenured and teaching track faculty), the chair will inform the administration of any division of opinion within the department. If the vote is not unanimous the chair will offer the opportunity for a representative of that opinion to provide a "dissenting view" to accompany the chair's own recommendation.

15. The department chair will give the candidate written notice, not to exceed two sentences, of the outcome of the department's deliberations and the nature of his or her recommendation to the Dean and Provost after the recommendation is made. The candidate will not be told the numerical vote or the opinion of any individual faculty member.
MATERIALS TO BE INCLUDED IN THE DOSSIER:

I. A letter of request to be promoted

II. An updated C.V.

III. Materials demonstrating excellence in teaching:
   a. Title and description of course(s) taught (contact hours, no. of students).
   b. Evidence of Excellence in Teaching
      i. Candidate’s summary of teaching evaluations, graduate, and undergraduate.
      ii. Letters from WFU faculty providing peer evaluations, as described above
      iii. May include letters from former students
      iv. May include evidence of mentoring of students, etc.
      v. Student-evaluations for each course taught in the previous 2 years (provided by Chair).

IV. Additional materials which may include a list of papers, presentations, awards, and grants that focus on teaching or student learning.

V. Evidence for contributions to education within and beyond the department, such as a role on honors or graduate committees, administration of interdisciplinary minors or programs, or educational outreach to the community

VI. A Teaching Statement/Teaching Self-Evaluation that may include any of the following:
   a. How you believe student learning occurs best in your discipline or courses
   b. How your teaching methods facilitate student learning
   c. A reflection of what has worked and not worked well in your classroom and how your teaching and pedagogy have changed over time
   d. What goals you have for yourself and for your students
   e. How your teaching enacts your beliefs and goals
   f. What constitutes evidence of student learning in your opinion
   g. The ways in which you create an inclusive learning environment
   h. What new techniques, methods, activities, and types of learning you have integrated into your courses over the years
   i. Have you participated in or led any professional development workshops or activities to enhance teaching pedagogy

VII. Information on Service Contributions
   a. Description of service activities, which may include, but are not limited to work on department, university or external committees, advising, service to professional organizations, leading teaching workshops both within and outside the department and university, support of students through letters of recommendation and other activities, and mentoring junior colleagues. This summary should describe the nature and scope of these activities.
   b. Evidence in support of excellence in these activities including awards, letters of support from students, faculty and administrators within the university, or individuals outside the university

VIII. Scholarly or creative activity (if applicable). Note: this category is not mandatory for teaching professionals, but will be considered if such activity is present.

IX. Supporting documentation (if applicable). Candidates may wish to include evidence of external recognition in development of teaching or service, for example.
Peer Review Template for Teaching Awards and Academic Promotion Applications

Observation of Teaching Session Report

Instruction:

Each reviewer should bring a copy of this form for discussion with the reviewee at the pre-observation meeting.

It should be completed by each reviewer after the observation, or the optional post-observation meeting.

Submit the completed Peer Review Observation of Teaching Session Report no later than 2 weeks after the observation.

Please note: The Peer Review Report that you submit should be typed. Thank you.
